White supremacist films shooting carnage as dozens mowed down

MADMAN'S VILE

Brave arrest by police netted killer alive

AN AUSTRALIAN white supremacist — a massacre of 50 people — by the most heinous terrorist attack on Australia’s soil. The man who has been identified as Brenton Tarrant, a New Zealand-born Australian, was arrested by police on Friday afternoon.

Tarrant, 28, is accused of murdering at least 50 people in two mosques in Christchurch, New Zealand, on Friday.

The attack is being described as one of the worst terrorist attacks in New Zealand’s history.

The shootings occurred at the Al Noor mosque in Christchurch and the Linwood mosque in the city’s Avondale suburb.

Police have confirmed that Tarrant was behind the attacks.

Tarrant has been described as a far-right extremist with a history of violent behavior.

He was arrested by police after the shootings and is currently in custody.

The attack has shocked the nation and has sparked widespread outrage and condemnation.

The New Zealand government has declared a state of emergency.

Prime Minister Jacinda Ardern said the attacks were an act of terrorism.

She called the attacks an act of “white supremacist” terrorism.

Tarrant has been charged with murder and is expected to face further charges.

The attacks have sparked a national debate on gun control and the role of far-right extremism in New Zealand.

The New Zealand government has announced plans to ban semi-automatic weapons and to tighten gun laws.

The attacks have also sparked a global debate on the role of the internet in spreading far-right extremism.

Tarrant had previously posted videos on social media平台 promoting white supremacy and had been previously convicted of terror offenses.

The attacks have also sparked a global debate on the role of the internet in spreading far-right extremism.

The attacks have also sparked a global debate on the role of the internet in spreading far-right extremism.